High Court Edict Won't Affect Local Agencies

Capitol News Service
SACRAMENTO — The U.S. Supreme Court decision, ordering that all units of local government which are elected must have the one man, one vote principle shouldn't have any major effects in California.

The main units of local government that are elected by districts are the 59 county boards of supervisors. William R. McDougall, general counsel for the County Supervisors Association of California, said the counties had been "getting ready" for such a decision since the handwriting first was on the wall in the U.S. supreme court decision on one man, one vote representation for state legislatures in 1964.

"We're in good shape," McDougall said, "although there probably will have to be adjustments in half the counties."

MacDOUGALL said it probably would be a matter of weeks before the U. S. supreme court decision was available to provide the guidelines. But he said the legislature passed a law in 1964 which required that any three supervisors in a county would have to represent a majority of the people. Since then, in a court case two years ago, the state supreme court set the 17-to-23 rule. This provided that no supervisor could represent more than 23 per cent of the people in a county nor less than 17 per cent.

"WE THINK most of the counties now conform to that rule," MacDougall said. "No doubt we will need a lot of adjustments when the court tells us about recutting the pie. This would be on the basis of the 1970 census so there may be some reapportionment actions in the counties in 1969."

Most cities have councils elected at large, with the notable exception of Los Angeles. Most special districts.

such as school boards, also have elections at large. Senator James R. Mills (D-San Diego), chairman of the senate committee on elections and reapportionment, said he doubted that any legislative action would be needed.
